IntelliClear Expands Domestic Presence with New Office Location in Colorado Springs

Company and Partner Network Locations Combine to Provide Global Coverage for Research and Consulting

HOUSTON, Texas, March 4, 2005 – IntelliClear today announced the relocation of its headquarters to Colorado Springs in a move that expands the firm's presence in the continental US. The announcement comes shortly after the company celebrated its one year anniversary in January following a highly successful 2004 fiscal year. "We're pleased with the development of IntelliClear in all aspects of the business and feel this move to Colorado Springs adds a new dimension of opportunity for us on both personal and professional levels," says Eric Shuster, Founder and CEO of IntelliClear. "The expansion of our offices, along with the continued growth of the IntelliClear Partner Network (IPN), provides a global reach and highly effective business model for our company and our clients." The IPN provides IntelliClear with a strong US and global presence, including focus group facilities and call centers in key cities throughout the US, with network affiliations in over 65 countries.

Colorado Springs, named one of the top 10 "Steroid Cities" by Forbes Magazine in 2004 for its fast growth and business attractiveness, includes strategic office locations for such high-tech industry leaders as Intel, HP, and MCI. Colorado Springs was named as one of the top ten most technology-advanced cities in America by the Center for Digital Government based on its 2004 Digital Cities Survey. "The Colorado Springs profile fits well with IntelliClear's focus on information technology," says Shuster who will be managing the new office starting March 7, 2005. IntelliClear will retain an office location in Houston Texas, where the firm's Managing Director, Dr. Alex Kalamarides, will reside.

IntelliClear boasts the capability of providing one phone number to reach all of its US offices (now and in the future), which is made possible by the firm's investment in voice over IP (VoIP) phone technology. By deploying VoIP over local cable high-speed broadband connections, IntelliClear is able to maintain a peer-to-peer communications network between its current office locations, as well as offices that will be added in the future, for voice, messaging, applications, and data storage. "These infrastructure investments made by IntelliClear provide us first hand experiences with these cutting edge technologies for commercial businesses, while providing a great convenience for our clients," says Alex Kalamarides, Managing Director and General Partner at IntelliClear.
